'How cheating is done'

Out on bail, Bedol offers help to reform polls

By Wilma Olan

LOOKING WELL-RESTED, LINTANG BEDOL BEGAN TO ENJOY a new, albeit temporary, lease on liberty yesterday afternoon after posting bail of P15,000 even as he told the Inquirer he was willing to talk about how cheating is done in elections.

The Commission on Elections (COMELEC) has approved the Magistrate's decision to release the former senator's partner to post bail, allowing him to deliver a warning to his wife's supporters in the Manila City Jail and paying a P1,000 fine for the crime of inducing corruption—possibly more than lawmakers had earlier assessed as "insultuous and insulting."

Bedol told the Inquirer that if the COMELEC would charge him with electoral fraud, he could shed light on the intricacies of cheating.

"It's easy to talk about how cheating is done if you are not guilty of it," he said in Filipino.

For example, he said, he could explain how votes were changed to null and void.

He said he wanted to talk about the ways of cheating used to help the Commission's election-related reform.

US state dep't report: RP losing edge in English

By Cynthia G. Bascos

ENGLISH LANGUAGE PROFiciency, while still better than in other Southeast Asian nations, is declining in the Philippines, according to a US state department report.

The report said high levels of corruption, efforts to enhance judicial system, weak law-enforcing protection of intellectual property rights, slow pace of energy sector privatization, need for further fiscal reforms to boost depressed spending

"Investment Climate Statements," prepared by the US Department of State's Bureau of Economic and Business Affairs

THEORETICAL Mining and Development Corp. has denied they were doing exploration in this area where their company initials have been painted on rocks. A company official said they were operating in another part of the municipality and not in the site reported by the village where a dog exploration was taking place.

This land is mined

By Rodriguez Andia
 from Palawan City

AMAY BONGRAG HAS HEARD THE STORIES many times before. Outsiders, some with guns and chainsaws, have been roaming their ancestral lands in the Anaphan range of northern Palawan, drilling strange-looking holes on the ground as if in a square water table.

Once recently when close observers told what they began to call "big holes" (people from the mine) rapidly spread throughout the village. He must surely be talking about the occasional treasure hunters from Java.

But Andia, a leader of the Tig-Hugan tribe in Sulu, Borneo, has heard tales, and he knows that the mining companies have reached their area, they have come to dig samples of dirt from deep-down in at least 30 meters to reach the water table.

He says he is not a miner, but he is a farmer. He has been told by some of his neighbors that mining is good for the community because it will provide jobs and economic opportunities to them. "They said mining is good as it will improve our lives," he says.

Andia said his group was opposed to the mining project because they considered the land for their livelihood. He claimed that the Philippine Mining Act of 1995, which allows foreign companies to mine in the Philippines, is a violation of the 1987 Philippine Constitution, which states that the right to mine is reserved for Filipino citizens.

Leaders of divided Korea agree on summit

SEOUL—THE CORRESPONDENT
North and South Korea will meet this month for the second time since the peninsula's division at the end of World War II. The new agreement announced on Wednesday stipulates on progress in Pyongyang's nuclear disarmament to serve the historic reconciliation.

North Korean leader Kim Jong-il will lead South Korean President Roh Moo-hyun from Aug. 26-30 in Pyongyang, North Korea's capital, South Korean president, security adviser Park

Jung-chul told reporters. At the last North-South summit in June 2000, Kim met South Korean President Kim Dae-jung in Pyongyang. The two leaders agreed tentatively at that time the 1990-93 Korean War ended in a ceasefire, not a peace treaty but the 2000 meeting led them to establish an economic cooperation project and stage reunions of thousands of relatives split by their shared history—the world's longest family feud.

Kim Dae-jung was a Nobel

Peace Prize for his efforts to engage North Korea, but the achievement was tainted by his revelations that South Korea made secret payments to bribe the meeting.

Kim Jong-il believed the timing was right for a second meeting due to the state of relations between the Koreas and the approved regional situation. South Korean President Roh Moo-hyun, who met North Korean president in 2000, said the South Korean government is seeking to end the world's longest family feud.

North encourages the summit. Steps to bring the Korea issue together have followed due to the last summit with North Korea's nuclear weapons activities that began in 2002.

But the summit comes in the wake of the first progress on disarmament since the crisis began, after North Korea shut down its aid spending because nuclear tests in exchange for aid. The United States and other regional powers are negotiating with the North on a deadline for the commitment clause to disarm all its nuclear programs and dismantle its facilities.

The summit announcement came as reports from North Korea said other countries in the three villages of Pyongyang to discuss nuclear disarmament and disarmament. The North agreed to the talks on Wednesday to meet quickly on disarmament. Even if the aid talks were time, South Korea's deputy nuclear envoy Lee Sung-min said.

Pyongyang says the nuclear issue is a dispute with Washington, not, making it unlikely that the North-South summit would achieve any further arms breakthrough beyond a third declaration. North Korea has consistently refused to engage South Korea on the nuclear standoff during summit meetings because of the risk.

On Wednesday, Lee said security talks are working to organize the summit that it would help "normalize inter-Korean relations that have stalled due to the North Korean nuclear issue," according to his spokesman. Chun Il-ho said.

In view of this, the article suggests shifting to a more efficient practice and method that keeps a focus clear and book-keeping without too much effort.

THE KITCHEN'S ALL HERE. Out of all stars, chefs and bloggers, their support in a cook-off for breast cancer advocacy group I Can't Seem to Cook Kitchen had helped this weekend on the Redwood Coast.

KITCHEN RESCUE

30 chefs in one Pink Kitchen

WHO WOULD HAVE thought that it was possible?

How often does Manila get a chance to sample food from 30 chefs and food enthusiasts all in one? Well, hardly ever!

But a good cause is never without its sacrifices and this weekend is living proof.

In full force, we all gathered for I Can't Seem to Cook, a breast cancer support and advocacy group. The event called Pink Kitchen is all set to rock Manila! And even this weekend at the Redwood Coast.

It is a mix of a local food site, the every-day of dishes to choose from quite extensive.

The organizers, breast cancer survivors in both Honolulu and Vancouver, made sure there was something for every palate to savor and to savor. Dishes were arranged on tables as work stations for chefs.

But no longer enough to be called for this purpose, what other way was there to give back than to our one food station for greater good?

This time we get a chance to do what we love best and, because of it, give those who love food hope today.

We all need you to help make Pink Kitchen a success. Please come join us for this one-of-a-kind culinary adventure.

Be prepared to finish your table loads and! You can also share with the Redwood Coast at 1007242 or 0026-0000000.

I hope you can share with the chefs for chicken, fish, beef, pork, seafood and Japanese food (etc.). I tried making them myself but I didn't get the result I wanted. The more those were ingredients I failed to include.
